CSWR Junior Fellowship Application

CSWR Junior Fellowships are available each year to several student residents who wish to enhance their academic study or research through pursuits that also make a distinguished contribution to the mission of the Center, its community, and its interreligious and intellectual projects. Junior Fellows might propose any range of projects or ideas, from a thematic series of lectures on a topic of interreligious importance or a film and discussion program on a religious topic to organizing community-based service projects or engaging in interfaith work. Such projects should advance their academic pursuits as well as support the work of the Center. Proposals should be appropriate to the Center's Mission Statement (available on the CSWR website), as well as the applicant's academic study and research. Successful proposals will outline a project meant to last throughout the academic year (September through May) and include a reasonable amount of detail (such as basic goals of the project, a schedule of events or meetings, estimates of time involved, probable expenses, etc.). Projects must be realistic in terms of what can be achieved with modest funding. This fellowship includes a taxable stipend.

Applicants may wish to consult with the Center's director, Francis X. Clooney, in preparing the proposal.

Proposals should not exceed 1000 words. This application should be attached to the regular application for residence at the CSWR. Please note that award of a Junior Fellowship is contingent upon being awarded residence.

Please answer the question below and attach this page to your application:

If you are not accepted as a Junior Fellow, do you still wish to apply to live at the Center?
